Another way to make money online while working from home is through consulting.

If you're particularly skilled in a certain field, you may be able to find people who would pay you to offer them advice on their business or personal goals. One way to show others how much knowledge you have to offer is to launch and promote your own blog.

9. Launch an online store

10. Sell your expertise by offering webinars

Learn about the different social media sites and identify one or two that you want to specialize in. Then identify a specific industry that you want to work in.

Finally, reach out to different businesses in your area that you recognize you can most help.

If you enjoy reading, you might want to consider working from home as a freelance proofreader. Depending on whether you have a degree currently, you may want to consider investing in a proofreading course to earn more credibility with potential clients. You could offer your services to clients independently or you may want to search for companies hiring full-time, remote proofreaders.
