Spanish 21

There are several rule variations for this game, especially as it is a popular game played in brick-and-mortar casinos all over the U.

A.

, so it is important to understand what the house rules are and how they may affect the house edge.

Spanish 21 is similar to Pontoon and is usually found under the moniker of, 'Spanish Blackjack'; and can sometimes be found online under the name, 'Pirate Blackjack'; but for the most part, it can be found in brick-and-mortar casinos.

Some of the more favorable player rules to balance the house edge is that surrender, doubling after splitting and re-splitting aces are all allowed while a player Natural always wins.

Five-Card 21's pay 3:2, Six-Card 21's pay 2:1 and Seven (or more) Card 21's pay 3:1, but not if the player has doubled or split.

Other Online Blackjack Variations

European Blackjack

However, the rules on when you can double down, split, or surrender will vary depending on what variant you are enjoying; we'll talk a bit more about that in the next section.

On hands of 16 or less, the dealer will always hit; on hands of 18 or more, the dealer will always stand.

In the case of a tie, the two hands push, and no money is won or lost.

Typically, you will not be offered the option to surrender if the dealer is showing an ace (and in some cases, you may not be able to surrender at all).

But the way players have to behave to get to that figure require a bit of a different approach.

In general, you'll find that the basic strategy in this game is somewhat more conservative, particularly when you're up against a dealer ten or ace.

The reasoning is clear: since you won't know if the dealer has made a blackjack until the end of the hand, it is very risky to put further bets out on the table, particularly against an ace.
