Sad senior man

One of the easiest ways to avoid being tricked by bogus five-star ratings is to use online tools like Fakespot or ReviewMeta. Both have browser extensions, along with apps for Android and iOS, so that you can automatically see if a product has low-quality reviews when you're shopping. You can also cut and paste the URL of a product page in either tool to get an analysis.

There's no guarantee that someone who works for the company isn't answering some of the questions. But if something has lots of reviews, you should be able to get a decent picture of the product. Instead of finding out whether people loved or hated it, you'll find details like whether the product has held up well, how difficult it was to assemble or whether the color matched what was displayed in the photo.
